

U.S. Domestic Travel Volume*

(Person-trips in millions)

Domestic travel in the U.S. has increased 9.2 percent from 1995 to 2004.

*TIA's TravelScope survey was modified slightly in 2003 to capture more information from traveling households. These changes enhanced the reporting of day-trip travel by U.S. households. Therefore, 1994 to 2002 actual travel volumes have been re-estimated to maintain comparability to 2003 data. However, yearly change over time remains the same. The enhanced reporting of day trips by households caused slight shifts in the profiles of some travel segments in 2003 compared to the past. Caution should be used in comparing the 2003 profiles of some travel segments to earlier years.

 One person on one trip 50 miles or more (one way) away from home.

Source: Travel Industry Association of America's Domestic Travel Market Report, 2005 Edition